

ALL ST. LOUIS AT WHOOPEE PARTY AFTER VICTORY

Town Goes Mad and Holds
Impromptu Parade In Celebration

Both Hero and Goat of The

Why

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 6.—This baseball mad metropolis of nearly 1,000,000 people is today simply cuckoo over that ball club, the Cardinals.

For twenty-four hours, the town's been "letting off steam." Everywhere you go, the natives buttonhole you and ask: "Well, what do you think of those Cards now?" There were impromptu parades in the downtown streets last night, and, until the wee small hours this morning, the St. Louis victory over the Philadelphia A's that tied the series in a knot, two games to two, was celebrated by dozens of private parties in the various hotels.

There hasn't been as much "whoopie" since last New Year's Eve. Flags and bunting assail the eye all over the city. St. Louis is in festive garb and World Series hysteria is rampant. The question of the hour is: "Can the Cards take 'em again today?" business men are asking it, white collar men are asking it. The jobless are asking it. Housewives and even the school kids, are asking it.

This afternoon the question will be answered at Sportsman's Park, when Burleigh Grimes, hardbitten, battling Burleigh, flings his "spitter" for the Cards while George Earnshaw, the A's great right handed speed ball specialist, does the pitching for Philadelphia in what promises to be the "money game" of the 1930 World Series.

Another great crowd is expected to jam the old ball yard to the bursting point. Yesterday, when Jess Haines pitched the Cardinals to a thrilling 3 to 1 victory over the A's 39,946 raving customers viewed the proceedings, the largest baseball turnout in the history of St. Louis. It proved to be a red letter day for St. Louis, for it was the first time since the Cardinals of 1926 trimmed the New York Yankees for the baseball championship that a National League team had won two games in one series.

I talked today to both the hero and the "goat" of that important ball game. The hero, Haines, was naturally quite pleased albeit very modest, while the goat, courageous little Jimmy Dykes, third baseman of the A's, was somewhat crestfallen but still holding his head high.

SERIOUSLY INJURED WHEN HIT BY AUTO

Bristol Pike Accident Victim
Identified as Trenton
Resident

DRIVER IS ARRESTED

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 6.—A man identified as Eugene A. Carrigg, aged 43, of Trenton Junction, is unconscious and in critical condition at Chambersburg Hospital with a possible skull fracture believed sustained last night when he was struck by an auto as he walked along Bristol Pike near Morrisville.

Robert O. White, aged 22, of 41 Central avenue, Morrisville, who took the injured man to the hospital, was later placed under bail by Justice of the Peace Nolan, of Morrisville, to await the outcome of the victim's injuries. Pennsylvania State Trooper Keuch, of Morrisville, investigated. Sherwood Bingley, of 121 West Palmer avenue, Morrisville, was riding with White.

White told the authorities he was returning from Tullytown about 9:30 p. m., and when about two miles from Morrisville he heard a noise which caused him to halt his car and find the unconscious man lying in the road. With the aid of Bingley he rushed him to the hospital in the machine and notified police. White declared he had not seen the victim walking along the road.

A card in the man's pocket bore Carrigg's name and address and stated he was a clerk employed on the New York Division of the Reading Railroad. There was also a card of the Fraternal Order of Eagles with Carrigg's name and fraternity officials were notified by the Pennsylvania State Police, so they might advise the man's family.

Inquiry at the new West Trenton station of the Reading Railroad at Trenton Junction revealed that Carrigg commuted daily to the company's Philadelphia offices, where he was employed. He was said to be unmarried and resides with his father, near the former Trenton Junction station. His brother-in-law is James Tyman, supervisor of the West Trenton station, but relatives could not be reached late last night to find if Carrigg had been visiting along Bristol Pike.

Dr. Samuel Jaspas, who treated the man at the hospital, said he was injured seriously.

ONCE WEALTHY RUSSIAN KULAK IS NOW EARNING BUT 75 CENTS A DAY

Following Revolution Well-to-Do Farmer Has Nothing More of Old is Noted On All Sides by Writer in White Russia

Editor's Note: Following is the last of a series of six articles written by Edward L. His stories contain a vast amount of hitherto unpublished information regarding living conditions in this important territory of the Soviet nation.

MOSCOW, Oct. 6.—One of a gang of peasants and laborers squaring weather-beaten logs with hatchets for use in constructing a cow barn for the collective farm was pointed out to us in White Russia as a "liquidated" kulak (well-to-do peasant). He used to be one of the two best farmers in the village. He had nothing more than all the other peasants after the revolution, but hard work and sagacity raised him to a position of comparative affluence in 10 years.

Recently his property had been confiscated, and now he was working not only as a day laborer for 150 rubles (75 cents) a day of 10 hours but actually hewing logs from his own home which had been torn apart, moved on wagons to the colchoze and was being set up again as state property in the form of a barn for a contemplated herd of 150 milch cows! The official figures are that 15 per cent of all the

"OLD WIGWAM," ERECTED HERE IN 1880 BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY INSPIRES A BRISTOL POET; DAYS OF OLD IN BRISTOL ARE VIVIDLY RECALLED

Photograph of Building Located at Mill and Wood Streets
Shows the Meeting Place for Many of the Town's Seers — Campaign Times Exciting

By "The Stroller"

A few evenings ago, a merchant on Mill street, showed me a photograph of the old Wigwam, that was erected in 1880, by the Republican Party, on a vacant lot at the corner of Mill and Wood streets, and suggested that the remembrances associated therewith, might furnish material for a good story. His suggestion stimulated my thoughts, and when a flood of recollections overwhelmed me, I picked up my pencil and began to write. Following is the story in rhyme, drawn from remembrances of fifty years ago.

The Old Wigwam

The old Wigwam of other days, is buried with the past.

And fifty years have come and gone, since I beheld it last;

But what a flood of memories within my brain appear,

As I look upon it's picture and can feel it's presence near.

'Twas in the year of '80 of the century that has passed,

When the town was small but growing, that the plans for it were cast;

The only hall within the town, "Ca-been's" it was known to us,

Was much too small to hold the crowds, when the issues were discussed.

The Republicans named Garfield, as their candidate before,

The Democrats chose Hancock, with a record in the war;

Garfield had been a tow-path boy, who trod the road to fame,

Hancock fought at Gettysburg, and won an honored name.

The campaign was exciting and Bristol had it's share.

So the contest called for leadership, of a type unusually rare;

William Grundy, Joshua Peirce, and B. F. Gilkeson,

These were the men who led us on, to many victories won.

These men were all of "Stalwart" type, who fought consistently,

And would accept no compromise, for party loyalty;

They believed a protective tariff, would maintain prosperity,

And never could they be accused, of party heresy.

Methods of voters of today, were staid and men like they,

The "Nyes" and "Borahs," "Norris" too, would have much less to say;

I think as I look across the years, our weakness I can see,

WEDDINGS OF INTEREST TO BRISTOL FOLKS

Arthur Bolton Weds Miss
Vera Kennedy at Church
Ceremony

MISS GLAZER IS BRIDE

A very pretty wedding took place in the Lutheran Church, Saturday afternoon, at 2:30, when Miss Vera Mildred Kennedy, daughter of Mrs. Bessie Kennedy, of 112 Buckley street, and Arthur Bolton, son of Mrs. Orpha Bolton, of Wood street, were united in marriage by the Rev. Paul Ronge, pastor of the church. Miss Marie Ronge played Lohengrin's wedding march as the bridal party entered the church.

Miss Kennedy was attended by her sister, Miss Beatrice Kennedy, as bridesmaid, and the best man was Harold Bolton, brother of the groom.

The bride looked attractive in a gown of dark blue crepe Elizabeth, made with a close-fitting bodice, cape back, and flared skirt. She wore a blue silk felt hat to match, black slippers, tan stockings and gloves, and carried an arm bouquet of pink roses and delphiniums.

Miss Beatrice Kennedy, the bridesmaid, was attired in a brown chiffon dress, the bodice of which was close-fitting, with a tan lace yoke, and the skirt was made with panel front and two tiers at the sides and back. She wore a brown hat, slippers and stockings to match, and carried an arm bouquet of yellow roses.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride, with the immediate families attending. The happy couple left during the evening for a honeymoon trip through the New England States and Canada, the trip being made via motor. They will be away about ten days.

Mrs. Bolton travelled in a blue-figured crepe ensemble suit with accessories to match. Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Bolton will reside at the home of the groom's mother on Wood street.

Mr. and Mrs. Bolton were born in Bristol and attended the public school. Both are well known and have a large circle of friends.

Mr. Bolton is employed by the Keystone Aircraft Corp.

Miss Ida E. Glazer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glazer, of Bristol, and Mr. Morris Witkin, of New York City, were married yesterday afternoon at "Shoyer's," in Philadelphia, by Rabbi Oscar Levin.

The bride was attractively gowned in dark green velvet trimmed with white crepe and white fur. Her slippers and stockings matched the color of her dress. The bridal bouquet was made of coral roses. Following the wedding a reception was held, the immediate families and intimate friends attending.

After a ten-day honeymoon trip the happy couple will return to New York City, where they will reside.

CLOVERNOOK INN RAIDED TWICE ON SAME DAY

Federal Agents Visit Place in Afternoon and State
Police at Night

ARREST THREE MEN

Some Beer is Found and One
Fint of Alleged Liquor

The "Raiding Trio" consisting of Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo, Corporal Dean and Patrolman Christ, State Police, Morrisville substation were busy again on Saturday night and continued the campaigning which they inaugurated on the night previous.

Friday night and early Saturday morning the three officers raided four places in lower Bucks County. Late Saturday night they made another drive and got two more places where it is alleged intoxicating liquor was being sold.

One of the places visited, it is said, had been previously raided by Federal agents working out of Philadelphia.

The Federal agents swooped down on a portion of the building known as Clovernook Inn, Cornwells Heights, Saturday afternoon. Here the Federal men called at the rooms of the Film Country Club and took into custody two men giving the names of John O'Day and Eddie Hanlon.

There was a half barrel of beer on tap and one pint of alleged liquor found in the place. The men will be given a hearing Wednesday before U. S. Commissioner Patterson at Philadelphia.

Saturday night Russo and the State Police visited the Clovernook Inn and took Joseph Ballard into custody. They found six barrels of beer but no liquor. Ballard says he is chef.

The Clovernook Inn has been raided on numerous occasions and was padlocked for a time by order of the Bucks County Court.

When Russo and the State Police visited the place they found about 25 guests on hand sitting at tables drinking.

The "Inn" is well equipped and has a dance floor and dining hall. An orchestra discourses music as the guests quench their thirst. While the officers were making the raid a number of cars arrived with other guests.

The officers next went to a shack along the River Road, near Croydon, where they found a man giving the name of William Miller. According to the information given to the officers there was supposed to be a still in the shack. On the second floor there were two barrels of mash but no still.

Both Miller and Ballard were given hearings before Justice Laughlin and held for further hearings Saturday night.

Enlarging Station So As To Give 100% Service

Nadler's service station just south of Mill street on the highway is being enlarged and renovations are being made so as to afford additional room for the increase in business at this popular station.

When the improvements have been finished the Nadler station will become a 100% service station and one of the best equipped in the section.

DISTRIBUTION FACTS

Business doesn't believe in miracles, but it is hopeful of extracting a fund of valuable information from reports on the distribution census, conducted for the first time this year. The first reports soon are to appear.

The data will cover every type of distributor and set forth sales, expenses, salaries, credit operations and other details, providing, all in all, a real aid in remedying our overproduction evil.

Those who directed the survey believe the whole distribution system is in the midst of major changes brought on by developments since the war and that the census should go a long way toward straightening out the tangle now evident on all sides.

That there is tremendous waste in distribution is obvious, and that the burden of that waste bears heavily on industry is equally apparent. Once the waste is reduced and a shorter and more efficient path marked out for products in their movement to the consumers, the more likely it is that prices will be lower, consumption greater and purchasing power advanced.

Necessity may be the mother of our first really efficient distribution system, a fact which adds nothing to that American reputation for efficiency. With the largest and best transportation system in the world, the present inefficiency in national distribution is almost inexcusable.

MORE GLASSES WORN

When the Harvard student body transferred its favor from the horn-rimmed type of eyeglasses to the newer style rims of white gold there was brought to light the startling fact that 90 per cent of the undergraduates of that institution of higher learning wear glasses.

No doubt all colleges and universities are alike in this respect, some probably varying slightly either way from the Harvard percentage. As for the non-academic population the percentage of defective eyes is considerably less. It is doubtful if more than twenty-five per cent of the country's population wears glasses.

One wonders if the sight of civilized man is failing or if he is just discovering his ocular defects. Before the masses learned to read they had less need for keen sight and therefore less opportunity of discovering that their eyes were imperfect. And then there are eyes that are efficient for all purposes except reading, so it is possible for the illiterate with poor vision to believe his eyes are perfect.

If the evolutionary theory that the faculties members and organs of animal life improve with use and become impaired or disappear entirely through disuse over a period of several or more "light years" is infallible, then human sight must be gradually improving through constant use. Of course it may take a million years or longer before there will be any perceptible change for the better. Here, at least, is something to look forward to.

The speed and worry that cause nervous breakdowns are the speed you're caught doing and the worry over the next installment on the car

RING CHAMPS TARGETS IN GAME OF HEARTS

Ring Success is Generally Followed by Failure in Dealings With Charming Ladies Whose Hearts Suddenly Develop Murmurs

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—They come splendidly in the ring, these two-fisted he-men champs, but in the game of hearts they fail to cover up.

In other words the ring boys get the worst of it rather often in things romantic.

They are lovely big targets for glittering ladies whose grievances can be healed with cash. And they are dandy bets for wives gone alimony-wise.

There's the classic entitled "Gene Tunney Marries Heiress." And there's the anti-climax entitled "Gene Tunney Sued for Breach of Promise."

We have with us at the present time, Jack "Kid" Berg, who is closely following in the ex-champ's foot-steps, at least so far as his sweetheart and sourheart are concerned.

The "Kid" is the outstanding contender for the world's light-weight championship and is engaged to a charming young lady named Elinor Kraus, who is a wealthy New York heiress. Jack is being sued by a pretty maniac for $50,000 as bail for a heart that developed a bad murmur when the "Kid's" engagement was announced.

The lightweight contender was practically knocked out by what his little manicured friend was doing about his busted heart, which the Kid declares he hadn't known was even splintered.

His winnings of $38,000 in his recent fight is a matter that may not have altogether escaped attention.

When Gene Tunney got married to the rich and blue-blooded Polly Landor in 1928 he was all set to enjoy himself for the rest of his life. Then on the horizon appeared the cloud in the shape of Mrs. Katherine King Fogarty, who decided it was her time to cash in. She decided that $500,000 was coming to her for breach of promise. However, the affair was given the K. O. by Gene and Mrs. Fogarty has been forbidden to annoy him in any State in the Union.

Even the great Dempsey was not free from demands of pretty ladies whose hearts had a habit of cracking up at a mere glance from masculine eyes. Lovely Bee Palmer's husband sued the Manassa Mauler for $250,000, declaring Dempsey had turned Bee's head. Dempsey said no and Bee and husband made up.

Of course the troubles of the ring boys are not all caused by glittering women with shattered hearts. They have plenty of troubles that are legal. Mickey Walker, world's middleweight champion, and Jack Kearns, former right pilot of Jack Dempsey, are at present engaged in bouts which have left them pretty groggy.

The trouble between the famous pilot and his wife began five years ago, and Kearns has been paying his wife $500 a month ever since.

Mickey's wife sued him for separate maintenance and custody of their 5-year-old son, while Mickey claims she had spent more than $119,000 in less than a year.

The boys, however successful they may appear in the ring game, develop into complete failures when they play the game of "hearts."

"Old Wigwam," Erected Here in 1880 by Republican Party, Recalls Days of Old Weddings of Interest To Bristol Folks

 For I realize what we need today is party loyalty.

The location of the wigwam, was a vacant lot.

At the corner of Mill and Wood Sts., next to Kinsey Evans' shop.

"Twas here where side-shows of would come, and gather in the 'tin'.

And where the wily medicine men, would rope the 'suckers' in.

Down the hill near the basin, a street ran along the top.

Where a wheelwright plied his trade, beside a blacksmith shop;

The blacksmith's name was Randall, he was a good one too.

And Sheetz the well known wheelwright, he too had lots to do.

When the wigwam was completed, the excitement grew apace, and the crowds that heard the speakers, filled every foot of space;

I still can hear his biting words, though fifty years have passed, For B. F. hated a Democrat, with a hatred that could last.

The campaigns differed then from now, the reason all should know, We had no telephones, no auto-cars, not even a radio;

Airplanes and Zeppelins had not been thought of yet.

But O Boy! How the liquor flowed, and the town was soaking wet.

Torch light parades were all the rage, —I wonder what they'd say, If the younger voters now could see, such a parade today;

I remember the famous pioneer corps, by Captain Stradling led, But many of those enrolled therein, now sleep among the dead.

But as the days passed quickly on, the campaign neared its end; And the Democrats thought Hancock would the presidency append;

The Republicans too felt certain, that Garfield would win out.

But the closeness of the contest, left plenty of room for doubt.

On election night over a private wire, the election news came in. And was read from the speakers' platform, to the crowd assembled therein;

Shortly after the midnight hour, it was known that Garfield won. And the enthusiastic voters, paraded, every one.

Today we sit by the radio, and listen to speakers' speech, On the issues of the campaign, and contented de we feel;

But oh how I wish a fairy voice, might woo back those days of yore, And invite us all to look again, on those good old times once more.

"I wish I knew what to do," said Roberta's father. "I know this is only a temporary phase of Roberta's character we're seeing now, but I don't like it. It gives an entirely wrong view of Roberta. When she is nice —is herself, I mean—no girl could be sweeter."

"I take your word for it," said Lady Sandison.

The doorway of the summer house darkened but Roberta did not look up. "I beg pardon," Sir George said softly. "Sorry to disturb you."

"I'm not disturbed," Roberta told him coldly. "What is it?"

She looked up at him and at once perceived her error in so doing. Ye gods! But he was handsome! Of course, he knew it. I'll show him he leaves me cold, she thought to herself.

He was looking at her questioningly. If Roberta could only have guessed it he too was disappointed in the island. It was beautiful, it was peaceful, but he might as well be in Sandisbar for all the excitement he was likely to find. Save for American slang and American manners and this girl's studied rudeness, life was as smooth as a mill pond.

"Smoke?" he asked and offered a cigarette.

"Father doesn't approve."

"Oh, well," Sir George said easily, "fathers have to have some prejudices, but I must say your old lad is remarkably free from them. Seldom met one more open-minded."

"Yes?"

"Jolly good sort, if you ask me."

"I didn't."

"What? Oh, yes, quite so," Sir George smiled. She was a pretty thing, this red-headed girl, even if she was a little brusque. "Well, then, I volunteer the remark."

He waited, but Roberta did nothing but blow smoke rings. The middle-aged might be a puzzle to her but she flattered herself that she knew her own generation. This young man had come out to make himself agreeable. Well, he would be left to do it all by himself.

But she had mistaken her young man. He looked off over the river and then back at her. "Got something rather awkward to say to you," he advised. "Fact is there's a young man on the mainland been trying to attract your attention for some twenty minutes."

"Where is he?" Roberta asked, her face stiff and masklike. To her utter chagrin she felt it stiffen. It must be Jack. Why did he make a fool of himself by coming here and not coming to the house openly?

"Over beyond the bridge on the road. He has left his car—rather a spiffy car. He's down on the towpath now."

"Quite a watchdog," observed Roberta scornfully, but she swung to her feet and went to the doorway and looked out. Yes, it was Jack. What was he doing here? She had written him that she could not meet him until next Monday.

"Want to send him a message? It can be done."

"No," said Roberta, feeling instantly that he thought she was afraid her father might see her and ask questions. "I can manage my own affairs, thanks."

"Absolutely," agreed Sir George and moved away.

To her astonishment he went through the doorway and toward the house. Roberta was so amazed that she could not make even the faintest move to stop him. She was annoyed. She was quite unused to such treatment. Here was she, the only girl he knew, apparently, this side of the Atlantic, any way the only girl he knew in this place, and instead of improving the shining hour, he came to her and delivered his message as casually as though they were two schoolboys and then walked off and left her!

Roberta walked slowly toward the beach and the bridge. Jack had seen her now. He moved toward her. He looked worried. Was he afraid of her father? Why hadn't he come directly to the island and asked for her, like any other boy she knew? The sunlight struck across his face, and showed her lines she had never seen before. Why, he was much older than she had thought. He was not a boy, he was a man.

Jack stood his ground near a tall sycamore and a thicket of sumac which screened him. He beckoned to her eagerly. Why couldn't he meet her in the open?

Robert MacBeth was frowning when Sir George joined him. He looked up quickly as the younger man came toward him.

"Wouldn't you like to try a bit of exercise?" Sir George asked. "Suppose you take my arm."

"Maybe I'd better," MacBeth agreed reluctantly, "though I'm dashed unwilling to stir. Well, once around, if you're bent for exercise."

"Once around it is," Sir George told him encouragingly. "We'll have you dancing in no time."

It would give the girl a chance, Sir George thought to himself, his eyes seeking the path to the bridge. Yes, there she went. It might be that the wisest course would be to warn the father, but he could not bring himself to do it. The girl was plucky. She had not asked him to keep quiet or anything of that kind. He could either keep his mouth shut, or go to blazes for all of her. Well, he would keep his mouth shut.

Slowly and painfully, leaning heavily on the strong young arm that supported him, Robert MacBeth made his way along the terrace. When they reached his chaise longue again, he relaxed gratefully as the younger man helped him to a comfortable position, and arranged his pillows.

There was a short silence. Sir George lit a cigarette and leaned against the wicker chair he intended to slide into in a moment. He could not see the girl now, and the car had disappeared.

Robert MacBeth had taken up a letter he had laid down just before his promenade. He handed it to his secretary.

"What do you think of that?"

It was a typewritten letter addressed to "Robt MacBeth" and said:

"Dear Sir: Do you know the man your daughter is meeting at different resorts on the Lincoln highway? Many facts in your life are known to the writer of this, which you would not like to find public property. If you want to know all the writer knows send letter to the P. O. Box given below and wait for telegram appointing meeting place. All will be told you."

It was unsigned, merely the number of the post office box, 0111, in a small Pennsylvania city, being given.

Sir George handed it back. "I'd throw it in the fire."

Robert MacBeth grasped the letter firmly. "That's where you would be wrong. Such letters should be kept and used to trap the writer or writers. I'll send it to a detective agency. It isn't scandal I'm afraid of. I've never done anything to be blackmailed for and neither has Roberta."

"Then why should you bother?"

MacBeth turned an honestly worried face to the younger man. "I'm pretty sure that the writer of this letter has some connection with the difficulty I've been having with my payroll, but I can't convince the police."

"Payroll!" Sir George looked at him in astonishment. "Do you mean the payroll for your employees in the city?"

Robert MacBeth shook his head. "Not the office. A much bigger thing. The money for the men on the construction job. You will likely laugh at the idea that this has anything to do with it, but though I've tried to, somehow I can't succeed in laughing very hard. I have a feeling these letters have some connection with a gang of men who mean to have a try for that payroll again, if they can't get at me and my money this way." He shook the letter.

"But surely you've taken precautions? Why not pay the men by check?"

Robert MacBeth made a wholly contemptuous gesture with his hand, which still held the letter. "Use your head. I can't pay laborers by check. Lots of the foreigners don't know what to do with checks. No, we've got to make and keep things safe ourselves."

He looked at Sir George, and, leaning toward him and in a low tone, said: "It's all right in New York. I can get protection, armored cars if need be, but I've a hunch there's trouble brewing for me and I've got a great many thousands of dollars to pay out on the big piece of construction work being done up the river. It's how to get the money there safely that is puzzling me now."

He paused a moment and said quietly: "I don't mind telling you that I have the sum deposited in the nearest local bank. I'm going to send some one down to collect it from the bank later and that some one may be you." He looked at Sir George questioningly.

"Yes, of course, but when and how?"

"That's what I want you to tell me. I'd like you to go down with Roberta today and look over the lay of the land."

"Can't your man take me?" Sir George asked. "Might find out more that way."

"I don't want the servants to know or suspect anything about it, nor the people in the village. In fact, I don't want anybody to know anything about it, except possibly Roberta."

"Must she know? Why drag a girl into this?"

"Roberta won't be dragged in," her father promised him. "But I want her to take you down the river to the bank and up the river to show you where the money is to be taken."

"By motor?"

"Yes."

"But you surely wouldn't let the girl drive if there was likelihood of danger."

"No, but you could drive yourself, once you knew the way."

"Oh, yes."

"Well, go with her to the village and to the bank, where she will cash a check and introduce you to the cashier. Then tomorrow she'll take you up the river."

"Have you told her this?"

"Not yet. Why?"

"It's barely possible she may have made arrangements of her own."

"She'll change that if I ask her," her father said easily.

"Ah—"

Sir George was not aware himself of how much he put in that "Ah." It was sufficient to make Robert MacBeth turn his head quickly and survey the young man. Having turned it he saw that the young man's eyes were fixed on a spot of blue. MacBeth was presently able to observe that this was a car on the high road over on the mainland and that opposite that car was a dim blur that had a bronze color. He remembered the color of the dress his daughter had been wearing that morning and turned his head so that the younger man might not see his face. Sir George continued to watch the bronze blur until it took shape and outline and began to look like Roberta MacBeth. Then he started, aware that the silence had been long.

"You were saying?"

"That I'll tell Roberta what I want as soon as she crosses the river. Or will you meet her and tell her I want to see her? And take yourself off for a time."

"Absolutely."

Sir George sauntered toward the river and met the flushed and exultant looking girl.

"Spying?"

His look was enough to make her feel ashamed of herself.

"Oh, I say," she said. "That was unfair and I didn't really mean it."

Sir George did not stop. "It doesn't matter," he said stiffly. "Your father is waiting to see you."

The girl angrily kicked a rock off the towpath into the canal. "Well, if you want to be hateful, be hateful!"

He turned. "If you would only get it into your extraordinarily pretty little head," he told her not unkindly, "that I'm here because I have to earn my living and your father has been good enough to give me a post—that's that. As for you and your friends, at the risk of being thought rude, I tell you that I don't give a tinker's d—n whom you meet or where you meet him, and that's all of that."

There had been a quickly drawn breath and then silence and he had walked on over the canal bridge to the highway, feeling completely ashamed of himself. Why had he lost his temper? His remorse gaining on him, he was about to turn once more when the sound of flying footsteps came to him. He turned to confront an angry and flame-cheeked girl, who told him vehemently: "You've just got to know this. You don't hate me one degree less or more than I hate you."

"Well, since we know it's mutual," said Sir George evenly, "suppose we go on hating each other as much as we like in private, and keep a friendly smile to face the world." He smiled at her now.

"Oh, you're hateful!" the girl cried. "Just when I meant to be decent to you for father's sake, you make it impossible. I promise you I'll do anything I can to speed your return to Bonnie Scotland."

"Ah," returned the homesick Sir George, his heart in his voice, "if you only could."

The girl looked at him speechless a moment and yet she did not go. He wondered why, but almost before he had done wondering he suddenly saw the answer to his question. The blue car was some little way ahead of him, on the tree-shaded cross road to the highway, and its owner was struggling frantically to start it.

That was why she thought he was spying; that was why she would not if she could help it, leave him alone.

He continued to walk toward the car and to speak so that the man whoever he was, might hear. "Surely you don't want to annoy your father and have him question you, do you? As for the blue car and its owner," he continued, "it is hardly my affair."

The man at the car jerked his head up and nodded to the girl and then quickly turned his back and busied himself with the car again.

Sir George waited for a moment. Surely any decent sort would be likely to come over and speak—make it easy

ST. ANN'S WALKS OFF WITH IVY COLLEGIANS

Home Team Easily Defeats Visiting Eleven by Score of 19 to 6

2ND VICTORY OF SEASON

By T. M. Juno

The Ivy Collegians were no match for the Bristol St. Ann's yesterday at Sullivan's field as the locals topped them by the score of 19-6.

It marked the second consecutive victory for the Purple and Gold and both were by the same score figures.

During the past two seasons, the "Saints" have won seven, lost two, and tied two.

Yesterday's game was played in a fast manner and some good ball running was shown by both teams. Bristol was weakened by the absence of four linemen and three backfield aces but this did not stop the team from winning its second straight.

The locals had three new faces in its line-up. John White made his debut in the backfield and proved quite a groundgainer. Oriola, last year's center, was back to his old position and held it pretty well. Massella was given a fine trial and may see more action before the end of the season is over.

The visiting team exhibited a fine line and backfield to the local fans and in the first quarter outplayed the Purple and Gold. It was in this quarter that the Collegians scored a touchdown. Monti was a triple-threat in the Ivy backfield. He was very fast on running the ends and gained much yardage. He backed the line and stopped many of the "Saints" rushes. The forward passing of the Collegians was done by him and many were completed. Trixie also showed up well in the visiting line.

Seneca, Roe and "Al" Daniels were the stars in the Bristol roster. Seneca made a large number of tackles and opened large holes in the line for the Bristol backs to run through. Roe, besides holding down his end position in fine fashion made three spectacular catches of forward passes that seemed headed for nowhere. One of these catches resulted in a touchdown and another for the extra point after the touchdown. Daniels gained considerable yardage from hitting the line and running the ends.

The Collegians, thanks to some fine running by Monti, scored a six-point in the first fifteen minute period. On the opening kickoff a local player fumbled and Colosanto recovered on the forty-yard line. A few line bucks by Perna and Rocco made a fine down. This was followed by another gain of ten yards and then Monti skipped around right end for a touchdown. The try for the extra point failed when the kick was blocked.

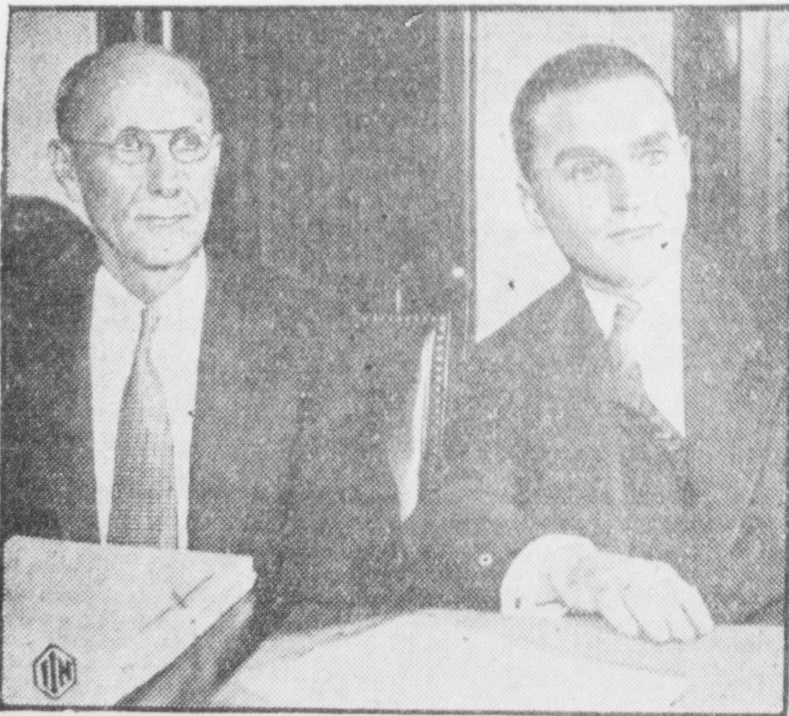

Fighting uphill in the second quarter, the "Saints" came back strong and tied the score on a touchdown by Roe. It took just two forward passes to do the trick. The first aerial was completed on a trick forward, Spadaccino to Gilardi, which netted forty yards. Then another was tried and seemed headed for nowhere but Roe leaped three feet in the air and came down with the pigskin tucked in his arms for the first St. Ann's touchdown of the game.

Late in the third quarter the Bristol team scored again. This time a kick of the visitors was blocked and St. Ann's received the ball on the thirty yard line. Here Roe came through with another spectacular catch of the forward and raced thirty yards before being tackled.

The resident team seemed destined for another goal late in the fourth quarter when Quici intercepted a forward pass and raced thirty-five yards before being downed on the ten yard strip. Only time cheated the locals from scoring this six-pointer.

Later in the week St. Ann's opponent for next Sunday will be announced.

Pittsburgh to Dedicate Impressive Memorial

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 6.—An impressive memorial to that titan of American industry, George Westinghouse, will be dedicated here today.

Funds for the memorial were raised by appropriations and subscriptions among the 60,000 employees of the Westinghouse Industries in the United States and Canada. The monument is located in the most beautiful portion of Schenley Park.

One of the features of the dedication will be the unveiling of a bronze group of heroic proportions designed by Daniel Chester French, considered by many America's foremost sculptor. The ceremony will mark the completion of five years' work to fittingly perpetuate the memory of Mr. Westinghouse, whose inventions and founding of tremendous industrial plants have marked him among the truly great Americans in his field.

Mr. French created the center unit of the memorial and the companion piece—the American youth. Henry Hornbostel, of Pittsburgh, nationally famous architect who designed the Hell Gate Bridge, Harding Memorial and the Carnegie Technical Institute Buildings, designed the settings.

George Westinghouse started life as a machinist in his father's shop in Schenectady, N. Y. He went to his work when thirteen years of age. His father, George Westinghouse, Sr., was a strict disciplinarian and exacted the same obedience to rules from his son as from his other employees.

This early training young George found irksome and later in life when he planned the electric works in East Pittsburgh, the coming magnate declared, "If you want men to do good work, you must also provide them with the facilities and surroundings to enable them to do it."

All through his life of achievement, he always bore the comfort of his workers in mind. It is said. His invention of the airbrake revolutionized railway travel all over the world.

Conservative English railway men were skeptical about the feasibility of his new creation. For years Mr. Westinghouse tried in vain to sell it to them.

He finally grew so discouraged that he offered to buy one of the English railway locomotives, a tender and a coach to demonstrate his device. The officials of the British lines declared they would sell him the equipment but he wouldn't be able to use their railways to prove the worth of his invention.

Today, this airbrake is a standard part of the equipment of railroads on all of the five continents.

Joint Inquiry Into Cause of R-101 Crash of buoyancy to alleged faulty construction. The one thing that is known for sure about the colossal tragedy, is that 47 men perished in the crash, explosion and fire that convulsed the world's mightiest dirigible in its death throes.

Eight men barely escaped alive from the inferno, all but two of them seriously injured. One of the latter, Wally Radcliffe, died from his injuries shortly before midnight Sunday.

Among the charred bodies laid in a long row in coffins in an improvised chapel here are those of Lord Thomson, British air minister; Sir Sefton Branner, director of civil aviation; Lieut. H. C. Irwin, commander of the ship; Wing Commander R. B. B. Colmore, director of British airship development; Major C. H. Scott and Colonel V. C. Richmond, assistant directors of airship development. There is a possibility that more dead may be found in the twisted jungle of wreckage.

Questioning of survivors and examination of the scene of the wreckage was first on the program of the joint Anglo-French commission temporarily formed to expedite inquiries. Air chief marshal, Sir John Salmond, accompanied by Air Commander F. V. Holt flew here from London to personally conduct the investigation. They will be aided by nine other British technical aviation experts, among them being Squadron Leader R. S. Booth, who commanded the R-100 on her recent flight to Canada.

The French air minister, Laurent-Eynac, arrived to supervise the French staff of experts on the scene.

One of the first acts of the joint commission was to issue an announcement that official communiques will be given out twice a day during the inquiry unless occasion demands more. These will be distributed at 3 p. m. and 10 a. m. (10 a. m. and 6 p. m. New York time).

Once Wealthy Russian Kulak Now Earning But 75 Cents A Day

them with new ones. The red plush burial banners hung in shreds from the rafters. That is what is left of "holy Russia." Several hundred square yards had been added to the overcrowded cemetery last year we were told. But the peasants weren't interested enough to dig a ditch around it to keep out the pigs. So the members of the kolhoz did this work because a fence would have been too expensive.

Half a mile away was a new elementary school of three grades for children from 8 to 11 years old. It was built last year. The village, itself 150 years old, never had a school before. During vacation time the building was used as a nursery for children of kolhoz members and the village poor while the mothers worked out in the fields. The rafters were plastered with paper banners, lettered by the pupils themselves. The most prominent banner read, "Religion is poison. Keep it away from children." The world revolution idea was expressed on another banner in the poetic words, "Burn more brightly you cause of October (the red revolution). Burn up with a universal flame all the ancient destructive oppressions." In one corner of the schoolroom behind a screen of rags was the bed and make-shift dressing table of the school teacher. The lower half of a window in the corner was covered with newspaper so that passersby could not peer in.

The new kolhozes had as yet offered no distinct lodging improvements over the capitalistic form of village economy because the peasants remained living in their one-room log huts. Because whole families are taken into the kolhozes, the number of members, "eaters" as they are called, is at least double the number of men and women workers. The workers are paid on an average of 1.20 rubles a day of 10 hours, women invariably less than men for the same work. The piece-work system is rapidly being introduced, if it is not already in force. That means that the kolhoz book-keeper and manager in paying wages take into consideration not only the number of hours worked but the quality and amount of work accomplished. This system had to be introduced so as to prevent discrimination in favor of loafers and lazy members. Money is usually paid out at the end of the month.

During the month, however, members are allowed to draw on the kolhoz for food which they need for their own subsistence. The food is generally rationed—so much for each working member and so much for each non-working member and children. The average ration is about as follows: one pound of black rye bread a day; 3 to 5 pounds of rye flour a week; one pound of butter a week; about two pounds of meat a month (a liberal allowance) cereals like rice, macaroni, farina irregularly at the rate of one pound a month; and all the vegetables and fruit the workers want. Children under 12 usually receive half the adult rations. Since most of the members have their own chickens and gardens their diet is supplemented from their own little households.

For all these products specific charges are made. The amount of food which members have drawn during the month is charged up to their accounts and deducted from the cash amount due them for wages. Money prices and money wages mean little in Russia at present, but some idea of the material standing of kolhoz members may be obtained from the following calculation as to prices in hours of work, always on the assumption that the manufactured goods are available (and they are available only in very limited quantity):

To earn enough money to buy a thin cotton Russian blouse a kolhoz worker must work 25 hours; for a pair of high Russian boots 200 hours; for a pair of shoes 120 hours; for a pair of cotton trousers 50 hours; for a linen chemise 25 hours; for a pair of cotton socks 10 hours; for a pound of butter 11 hours; for a liter of milk 1 hour; for a liter of vodka 20 hours; and for a pound of rye bread 1 hour. The prices are based on those prevailing, actually or theoretically, in state co-operative stores. On private markets or from private peddlers the prices are from three to ten times higher. And the lot of private peasants is much harder.

It is not difficult to see that the kolhozes are at present no bed of milk and honey for the peasants. Setbacks are received from time to time as for instance an epidemic of hog cholera which this year killed off about 40 per cent of the pigs and nullified all chances of solving the meat crisis in another year as was hoped. Indiscriminate herding of livestock in collective barns is bound to increase the menace of disease. There is much building, much activity, much hard thankless toil and much faith and hope in those who are doing the building. The individual peasants, most of them, are still standing at the cross-roads looking back at their shambled huts sunk in the mud and ahead to the new kolhozes which blaze the trail of socialism out on the Russian land.
